The Elegant Zen of the Tysons TenPenh

Jeff Tunks' Asian flavors presented in the comfort and serenity of a far-eastern villa

When TenPenh opens in a new development at Tysons Corner this November 2016, those who fondly remember the original ground-breaking pan-Asian restaurant down the street from The White House will have a hard time deciding between old favorites like Jeff Tunks' Red Thai Curry Shrimp, Chinese-Style Smoked Lobster, and Whole Crispy Fish -- the dishes that made the place a legend in its eleven years downtown, and one of the reasons it was so lamented when its doors closed five years ago.

Those doors will reopen across the river onto a breathtaking new atmosphere of Asian elegance as imagined by Gensler, the international architecture and design firm responsible for the stunning interiors of the most recent Passion Food Hospitality ventures. Inspired by the layout of a traditional Chinese courtyard house [complete with a contemporary moon gate,] the new TenPenh features a succession of rooms of differing character, some arranged around an outdoor courtyard, others, around the bustling open kitchen. Rather than overtly projecting the Asian theme with decorative objects and motifs, TenPenh evokes the sense of a private home of a sophisticated westerner who has lived in Asia and absorbed the serenity of its highest aesthetic: calm, uncluttered, and inviting. Everything down to the texture of walls is calculated and considered, producing a consistent elegance that is punctuated here and there with moments of whimsy animals of the Chinese zodiac hidden throughout!], bold elements of jade, amber, and onyx, and the dramatic play of light and shadow.

In this completely modern setting, up to 254 guests in various dining rooms, lounges and bar settings will enjoy a menu of Asian-inspired cuisine that is as carefully considered as the atmosphere. Years ago, when the original TenPenh was in development, the partners of Passion Food Hospitality traveled throughout Asia seeking inspiration. Chef Jeff Tunks, keen to learn from experience instead of from cookbooks, engaged in intensive cooking classes in Thailand, and savored everything on the journey, from earthy street food to the most refined sushi. In its new incarnation, Tunks will bring back the exotic signature dishes of old, adding new ones destined to become favorites of the next generation TenPenh
